What it does: Manufacturing automation services—electrical engineering design services and software to run manufacturing processes electronically rather than manually.
Why it's growing: Added an information technology side and software group providing IT services to local companies and installing full-time manufacturing systems.
What's noteworthy: While most competitors use top-down programming, they use modular-based programming, making much of the code they write repeatable and thereby adaptable to highly technical projects for companies like Proctor and Gamble and Amylin Pharmaceuticals.
